An artist who incorporates a philosophical touch, Laila Brandt's pieces reflect the theme of "perfect imperfection." Using a variety of materials and processes in her work, she ensures that many of her pieces contain holes, "signifying an artistic obsession to balance the positive and negative spaces of how we see ourselves" she notes.

Born in Copenhagen, Denmark, Laila has lived in London most of her life. Art has always been of special importance and she has successfully completed numerous art and ceramic courses. Laila considers herself a "mainly self-taught multi media artist who thoroughly enjoys hand building with clay, creating with fiber, drawing and painting."

An active member of the London Potters Guild (LPG) for more than 15 years, Laila recently opened her own boutique at a local market. The transition was a welcome change, having moved from a busy, full-time management career and raising a family. She now teaches hand building with clay at various locations, including London Clay Art Centre (LCAC). Her eye-catching pieces have been featured in the Forest City Cookbook and several juried exhibitions including the London Artist Tour and London Pride Art Show.

For Laila, the feeling of clay in her hands and ability to transform it into something meaningful, is incomparable. "I prefer to create a limited number of pieces, giving the customers who connect with my work, a true appreciation for one of a kind."
