An active student of the art and science of ceramics, Pauline views her remarkable pottery creations as extensions of herself. Her pursuit of knowledge has taken her as far as South Korea, where she trained with five master potters. As an accomplished instructor, she teaches her students with passion, precision, and humour.

Largely self-taught and quite crafty, Pauline is a studio potter who works from her home in London. Her pieces are unique, handmade, functional pottery, with a bit of Korean influence based on her extensive training. Despite her expertise, she still loves taking workshops whenever she can with ceramic artists, whose work she admires.

Pauline achieves a sense of pride whenever her creations are used in homes to create an atmosphere of warmth and beauty. "Every piece of pottery that I make is a part of who I am. It makes me happy when someone buys my pottery and uses it every day. I hope it makes them happy too!" Pauline's relationship with clay continues to blossom and is evidently, far from over.
