Expect the eccentric with Tammy Ward. From jellybean row houses and dragon sculptures, to dragonflies and trees, each of her pieces is pleasantly unique and thought provoking. Tammy's clay art journey began more than 20 years ago at Lambton College. Remembering that spark of interest the very first time, Tammy recalls she knew that pottery would be her everlasting love.

A great admirer of the outdoors, Tammy's home studio sets the scene for her magical handicraft. Located on a farm, her workshop overlooks a pond and pasture with a majestic pine forest at the back. Inspiration abounds.

Despite her undisputed skill, Tammy considers learning a life-long experience, and still finds great joy in learning from other potters, and sharing her own knowledge with art wisdom seekers. A devoted member of the London Potters Guild for more than 15 years, her whimsical creations, whether functional or purely decorative, are definitely something to behold.
